What do University of Edinburgh graduates do?

School: Moray House School of Education and Sport
Level: Undergraduate
Response to survey: 51%

Context: Looking at what previous graduates have done can be useful when considering your own options. The Graduate Outcomes Survey provides the best insight we have into what graduates do. It is worth remembering though that not all graduates respond to the survey and for those that do we don’t have any context around other factors which may be contributing to their career.

The figures used here combined two years’ of survey data.

Employment and Further Study
96% of graduates from this level and School were either employed (including self-employment) or in further study. This excludes graduates who were travelling, caring for others or retired.

Highly Skilled Employment and Further Study
89% of graduates from this level and School were in highly skilled employment or further study. This refers to graduates who were in either employment or further study and for those in employment shows the percentage that were in “highly skilled” employment. This is often referred to as “graduate level” employment and consists of jobs which tend to be in more senior positions or those which need a professional training to obtain. A job is defined as “Highly Skilled” if it has a standard occupational classification of between 1 and 3.
